

Bioavailability

The ability of a substance to be absorbed by a living organism. For this study it is specifically the portion of the total arsenic in soil that is absorbed through the GI tract and thereby able to reach the central blood compartment and subsequently be distributed throughout the body to target organs where toxicity may occur.